

TIME TO STOP BREED DISCRIMINATION!!!

- American bulldog
- American Staffordshire terrier
- American pit bull terrier
- Staffordshire bull terrier
- English bull terrier

This breed is easier to train than many other breeds. Pit bulls are more likely to obey their Owners and require fewer command repetitions.

For owners who love to be active, pit bulls will keep you well exercised. This breed is very energetic and requires daily activity to stay in shape and remain content.

This breed is also rated as the most adoptable, making it easy to find many affordable canines who need a loving home for the cost of a donation or rehoming fee.

This breed does well in hotter climates, but don't expect a pit bull to adjust well to cold locations.

A pit bull will be part of your family for many years to come. The average life span is eight to 15 years.

The breed rarely barks, so if a pit bull does have a barking problem it is probably due to boredom or rambunctiousness.

Since these dogs are highly affectionate, many have made excellent therapy and service dogs.

Some common health problems can include hip dysplasia and knee problems, along with thyroid disease, allergies, and mange.

You won't have to worry about this breed's teeth. Pit bulls have great dental health and very few, if any, dental problems during their lifetime.

When trained properly, the American pit bull terrier is considered playful and great with children.

Under the right training and a loving family, American pit bull terriers are known to be affectionate, cheerful, friendly, loyal and social. They are also alert and intelligent dogs.

Pit bulls are not considered great watch dogs since they rarely bark and can be too trusting of humans. Their loyal nature can, however, lead the breed to protect its owner in times of crisis.